changed by another programmer in SQL I work in a team with other programmers. Every programmer works on separate tables in the database. When ever a new feature in the database is introduced, another programmer takes the responsibility to make sure that the data are correctly inserted into the database. Some time, programmers create tables and fill data manually. Here is the question: is it possible to update the data in the tables with other programmer's data? A: This is perfectly possible. The way this is done is to only update the information to the database using a new programmer's SQL statements. The changes that other programmers make are not saved to the database. Q: Checks about JavaScript itself I was reading this book and on the section about var statements, he says that: Statement 7 says that variables declared in the program flow as local variables are hoisted to the top of the enclosing scope. I was wondering, why is this so? If I do: function f() { var a = 42; return a; } a will hold 42. But if I do: function f() { function g() { var a = 42; return a; } return g(); } I still get 42 as a Enter the Chive The Chive's purpose is twofold: 1) to grow the Hoboken community and 2) to connect that community by building a platform where everyone can create and consume local content. In Hoboken we have a thriving startup community, a collaborative atmosphere, and a strong civic pride. The Chive will provide that platform. Our aim is to create a space for anyone who has a story to share to hear the audience's response. The Chive will connect likeminded people, regardless of their geographic location, by drawing from a shared community of producers and consumers. You can follow one of these topics and be informed of what people in your vicinity are talking about: food, music, art, culture, community events, and so on. You can even join a group or create one for yourself. Your local topics are what determine what you see, how you see it, and who you see. The Chive is free, whether you participate or just watch. We are built upon the premise that life is more productive when people are informed, empowered, and part of something. We're here to break down the walls of silos and bring ideas to life.
